That looks like an opening for a competition of an unusually interesting character.

After allowing their bicycle ordinance to remain a dead letter for a year, the Long Branch authorities have suddenly begun to enforce it with great vigor. At the request of many citizens in Hudson County, N. J. I beg leave in the interest of good government, as expressed in the Chicago Democratic platform of principles, to announce myself as a candidate for Congress from the VIIth District. I have been a resident and taxpayer in Jersey City for thirty years, and I have originated and publicly advocated measures of value, some of which have become laws of the State. I have been consistent in urging at all times important facts for the public good. I think my iong and faithful service to the people, as well as support of good candidates, privately and on the stump, without asking what were their creed, nationality, or private and personal opinious, only that they were the regular nominess of the Democratic party, entitle me at this time to your support. If nominated and elected I piedse you a faithful service as your representative supporting the platform and measures of the party, and in all things obeying the will of my constituency regardless of my own private opinion; that upon questions of party interest, the party cyacus will be my rule of action, and upon questions of public concern, the people's will would be my law.

Mr. Lynch's announcement renders it unnecessary to hold any convention in the VIIth District. Both sides cannot do less than nominate him by acclamation, and they had better take action promptly lest he change his mind.

Charles Balley, of Belleville, has an unfinished house on his hands that is worse than a white elephant. He cannot finish it or sell it or, in fact, approach it. Plans were drawn to suit the taste of every member of his family, the contracts were let and the building

Balley watched the operation with alert interest. Every sod that was turned and every trowelful of mertar had a particular personal interest for him. The house had reached the first story when it was discovered that the land on which it was being built could only be reached by passing over the land of the Eric Railroad Company, and that the Teeter estate had no right of passage, consequent-Balley had none. Negotiations were begun, but the opposing hand-owners failed to come to an agreement. Balley therefore had a house, but he could not complete it. SOUND-MONEY DECLARATIONS OF THE STATE CONVENTION IN MAY REAFFIRMED AND

SPEECH.

[BY TELEGRAPH TO THE TRIBUNE.] Trenton, Aug. 26 .- All doubts as to the seriousness of the split in the Democratic party in New-Jersey were dispelled when the convention of the soundmoney wing of the party was called to order in Taylor's Opera House this afternoon. While the meeting was by no means a large one, it was distinctively representative of the element of the party which for Gathered on the floor of the hall were lawyers, bankers, editors, merchants, manufacturers and farmers who are accustomed to thinking and to studying problems of political economy. What the convention lacked in numbers it more than made up in en-thusiasm. Every reference to the Administration of President Cleveland and every allusion to sound money received loud applause.

A conference of the leaders of the third ticket movement was held at the Trenton House in morning. Ex-State Senator H. D. Winton, of Bergen County, presided and Francis D. Pollak, of Union County acted as secretary. Ways and means of com-

In opening the meeting Chairm n Winton said:

Mr. Fairchild's speech was frequently interrupted by appliause. He said:

Mr. Chairman and fellow-Democrats of New-Jersey. I do not come here as an advocate of this movement, because I myself am a convert of recent date to it. Not that it ever entered into my mind that I should vote for the candidate or support the principles of the Convention which put Mr. Bryan in nomination at Chicago (appliause), for young in my Democratic life I had learned that a vote thus cast would be a blow at Democracy and Democratic ideas, and if my vote should unhapply cause the success of the candidate named at Chicago, I felt that the success would be a step toward the destruction of Democracy, which could not be equalled by any defeat, however overwhelming it might be (Applause). It seemed to me that that Convention had gone so far astray from everything that was Democratic and that it threatened us with such immediate and terrible disaster, that it was hardly worth while to do anything to contribute to the defeat of what was done at Chicago. Its defeat seemed inevitable.

"On my way from the Pacific coast, however, I stopped in the city of Chicago a week or two after the Chicago Convention had adjourned, and there I learned that it was deemed to be very essentially men of information, of influence, and of wisdom in the States of Illinois and Indiana that a Democratic move, which should represent true Democratic party, but to save the United States of America, (Applause.) And when I looked over the list of electoral votes, and found that with all of New-England, New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware and Maryland there were still ninety-five electoral votes to be gotten, and without the States of Indiana and anois it was difficult to understand where they could be gotten. I deemed it my duty to set aside all individual information and be governed by the judgment of the wise and patriotic men of those central States, and thought it was our duty here to hold up their hands in every way that we could in order that we might aid them in carrying out our patriotic purposes.

PRESERVING THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

Now just think of that kind of regularity under May,"

Now just think of that kind of regularity under those conditions carried out to its legitimate conclusion. Suppose that the Democrats nominated their electors to support the nominee of the Chicago Convention. Suppose the Democrats of the State of New-York put their respective number of men in the same position, selecting respectable men, men standing high in the community, as they have done heretofore, and ask them to undertake this task in order that the Democratic organization of the State of New-Jersey and of the State of New-York might continue to be regular within the Democratic organization of the United States, selecting presumably men who do not believe in this dectrine advanced by the Calcago Convention, who fear its results and undertake this task in order to preserve that regularity. Now suppose that these electors should be chosen by the States of New-Jersey and New-York, and suppose that the result in the nation was to depend upon the vote of New-Jersey and New-York as it has so often done before. Now, understard, we don't vote for President and Vice-President. We yote for electors under our system, and those electors meet one month after the election in the respective capitols of their States and there vote for President and Vice-President, exercising, presumable under our Constitution, their judgment, but actually merely cartying out a commission. Another reason why so many of us wish anothe currency question stated more learly and more honestly than it has been stated

It is no wonder that men who are removed from the centres of business, men who do not see how the affairs of the world are actually carried on, but who only see the minor parts, have been led away by these currency delusions, and it is the duty and the privilege of men like those who are assembled here to attempt to lay before the people of this dountry the truth of these questions. I have the most profound regard for many of those men who are advocating this doctrine which we believe will be so pernicious. I have been thought intimately in contact with them. I know their character; know their purpose and I know that great numbers of them are inspired by perfectly particule motives. Many of those in the South and the West are not inspired by a desire to get rich, but it is merely that they feel that they are doing justice. I respect their sincerity, and the however all of us to approach them with respect for their sincerity, and when we do that possibly we can get upon a plane with them wherein we can discuss these questions and perhaps bring them to our views without going through the school of terrible experience in this country of ours.

HIS CLERK GONE WITH THE DEPOSIT. A. H. Triller, a butcher at No. 591 Communipawave., Jersey City, sent his clerk, Frederick Kimbark, on Monday afternoon to deposit $125 in the First National Bank. The clerk, with the butcher's boy, drove to the bank. The clerk left the boy in charge of the wagon and walked toward the ferry. The butcher, after waiting three hours for the return of the clerk, boarded a car and rode to the bank, and found the wagon and the boy patiently waiting for the missing clerk. The butcher concluded that Kimbark, who is married, had gone to Tarrytown to see his wife, and he visited that place. Mrs. Kimbark had not seen her husband. Zriller yesterday informed the police.

IT WAS A RESORT FOR INEXPERIENCED TRAMPS, BUT THEY NEVER SLEPT THERE TWEE.

Westfield, Aug. 26.-The old summer home of George Hanneman, a wealthy naval contractor, in Clark-st, was destroyed by fire yesterday. The house was a large one, but it had been unoccupied for a long time. Its location made it a tempting resort for tramps, but it is said that no member of the wandering traternity ever slept there a second night, and the regular rounders gave it a wide beyth. Last Wednesday night at 11 o'clock a party of Westfield officers caught a tramp, who was running away from the house in terror. He could hardly talk, but when he grew quiet he said he went into the Hanneman house to sleep. He went to the second floor and laid down on some grass he had pulled outside. He awoke with a start. He could not hear a sound, yet a sudden and overpowering terror seized him. He tried to shout, but could not. Every moment his fear increased, ne said, until he could scarcely breathe. Then he made a tremer dous effort and dashed from the house, and did not stop running until the officers overhauled him Others who have tried to sleep in the house relate almost the same experience. How the house caught fire is a mystery, but it is thought the flames were started by tramps.
